

business community. But, in any case, our Samson has placed his head on her knees and has been beguiled into telling the secret of his strength. And the secret of that strength is never to have his hair shorn, his hair consists of those principles and beliefs that have motivated him in the face of criticism by people in his own district...

SPEAKER BARRETT: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...and other parts of the city. And he would not allow those locks to be shorn. But he was beguiled, and Delilah called a barber, defaming the profession of which I am a member, and the locks were shorn, and he awakened and shook himself as he did in the old days, but the strength had departed. No longer did that vibrance flow through his frame, and he was weakened. But Samson of the myth made amends. He came back to that from which he had departed, and his strength came back, and he pulled down the temple of evilness, although he died in the process. So in this process, if my colleague regains his strength and returns to the first principles, he will help pull down the temple of wickedness, but he will not die in the process, that which kills will die.

SPEAKER BARRETT: Time.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And that which was dying will live again.

SPEAKER BARRETT: Thank you. Senator Schmit, please, on the reconsideration motion.

SENATOR SCHMIT: Mr. Chairman and members, yesterday afternoon, during the debate upon this bill, I happened to walk out into the Rotunda, and almost immediately I was struck by a similarity between what was happening out there and what happened last year. And I turned around and read the board because I thought perhaps we had reverted back to another bill. It reminded me of the debate and the interest, the intense interest and the lobbying that took place on a little bill called 835 last session. Some of you recall at that time I said if this bill becomes law, business will not let the lesson go unnoticed. Now I've always been one who has encouraged business to become involved in the legislative process. I did not ever intend for them to take it over. I intended for them to be a part of it as teachers, laborers, farmers and everybody else. And I think they ought to be involved. I want to thank Senator Chambers for bringing the opportunity for us to debate this bill. I want to
